Rebels Wallop New London 55-39

By Kathy Bragg

The Appomattox Rebels walloped New London 55-39 in a Group II District IV game. The Rebels showed their best offense and defense of the season. The Rebels were outstanding on their rebounds, getting most of their own rebounds and those of the New London team.

Boogie Whitehead rippled the nets for 25 points and Jimmy Torrence hit for 18 points to lead the Rebels to victory.

The victory put the Rebels at 5-5 in conference play and sews up third place for the Rebels in the Northern Division. If the Rebels win the rest of their games, they may be able to get into tournament play.

The Appomattox girls beat the New London girls, one of their top competitors, 29-28. This will help the girls on to the tournament road, if they win the rest of their coming games. The girls have only 2 more games so their hopes are high.

The girls are now 5-3 in conference play. They are now in 2nd place. Everyone come out, and support your teams again tomorrow night when they play Brookville, and again Saturday night when the J.V.'s and Boy's Varsity play Altavista. Both games will be played away.

Vepco Seeks High Volt Line

The State Corporation of Virginia will soon be asked to issue a certificate of public convenience and necessity for a future high voltage transmission line proposed by Virginia Electric and Power Company. The company's application, which will be filed in the near future, is designed to help the Company offset rising costs and meet the growing demands for electric service in Virginia where 748,000 of its 810,000 customers are located. The Company also serves parts of West Virginia and North Carolina. The Commission is expected to hold a hearing on the Company's application.

The Company's constant search for additional operating economies is reflected in the fact that it has had only one general rate increase in the past 37 years and its most recent rate reduction was in December 1962. Rates reduced at that time will result in a savings of $3,000,000 per year to Vepco's electric customers.

1863 Currency Act

Local Banks Celebrate Centennial

A highly significant Act of Congress of February, 1863, though it got little attention at the time, provides the historical basis of the Centennial celebration this year of Appomattox' two banks, Farmer's National Bank and the Bank of Appomattox, plus its Hillcrest Branch.

Bankers throughout Virginia in cooperation with most banks throughout the nation are combining their plans to commemorate the 100th Anniversary of the Dual System of Commercial Banking in the United States.

On February 25, 1863 President Abraham Lincoln signed the National Currency Act. This act established the much - needed national currency and restored confidence. It also authorized the chartering of national banks by the Federal Government to function alongside and in cooperation with already established state-chartered banks.

The history of both Appomattox banks reflects the growth and development of this area of Virginia, though set in a later time from this original Banking Act.

The Bank of Appomattox, celebrating its 63rd birthday on April 8, started operations with $10,000 capital.

Farmers National Bank, which opened its doors on Sept. 16, 1918 was chartered with $50,000 capital. Combined assets of the two banks are now well past the eight million mark.

During the past year demand deposits in both banks rose to a new high of $2,528,547.85, an increase of 136 thousand dollars. Time deposits in both banks increased from $4,345,653.72 to $5,147,680.56.

Significance of 1863 act

To fully appreciate the significance of the Currency Act of 1863 and the Centennial celebration it has inspired, it is necessary to have a look at the chaotic currency situation that existed at the time Secretary of the Treasury Salmon P. Chase (the man on today's $10,000 bill) proposed it.

While there were a number of states with very good banking laws and systems, a large number of the 1500 state-chartered banks in the country were printing and loading out their own bank notes. As a result, some 10,000 varieties of paper money were in circulation. The result which were worthless because counterfeiting was easy and none had been issued by banks that were no longer in business.

New Era

As often happens with an ambitious and complicated new piece of legislation, the National Currency Act soon revealed some defects which had to be taken care of before it could really begin doing the job Chase had in mind. By 1870 more than 1600 banks, representing three - fourths of the country's banking resources, were functioning under national charters and the formative stage of the new system was completed. In subsequent years, state - chartered banks discovered that they could operate profitably without issuing currency and these banks, too, continued to grow and to flourish.

Surrender Story Printed In Times Reaches Florida

In both Tampa and Winter Haven, Florida, the "true" story of the Appomattox Surrender Surrender was reprinted last month.

Thanks to the sense of humor and enterprise of Mrs. Virginia Poley Miller, City Commissioner for Winter Haven, and a cousin of Mrs. R. G. Janaka, of Appomattox, the Dec. 20 article in the TIMES VIRGINIAN recounting Lee's "accidental" surrender to Grant was reprinted in two newspapers.

The Winter Haven Daily News-Chief had this to say on Jan. 2: . . . "today's report (from City Commissioners) set a record straight that has been in error for almost 98 years. The surrender of Robert E. Lee at Appomattox was a case of mistaken identity said Commissioner Virginia Miller, who is one of the South's most loyal citizens . . ."

And from the Tampa Tribune: "Reading from a newspaper account in Appomattox TIMES dated Dec. 20, 1962, she (Commissioner Miller) told the story which went to this effect:

Gen. Robert E. Lee, mistaking Gen. Ulysses S. Grant for a Southern orderly handed him his sword to clean. When the Northern general accepted the charge as a surrender, Lee was too much of a gentleman to renege on his gesture and capitulated."

Winter Haven recorded Mrs. Miller's "true version" in their minutes of the City Commission. The TIMES VIRGINIAN found the Surrender account in a publication by the Virginia Press Association, Inc.

Times Salutes Its Heartwarmers

We couldn't let Valentine's Day go by without wishing each of our correspondents a Happy February 14. These writers serve their communities without pay. Each week they turn in news of neighbors and friends to liven up our pages and inform the readers of happenings in all parts of the county.

We call them "Heartwarmers" — because they write about the people they know — their good times and bad, and they write with the understanding that only a neighbor can give.

To you, our correspondents we say: "Keep up the good work."

And to our other readers, a special Valentine wish for health and happiness. Please remember that this month of Heart Valentines is also Heart Month for the Piedmont Heart Association. Give — so others may live.
